

NEC Shows Battery-Less Remote Control

Written by Bob Snyder
21. 11. 2009

In Japan, NEC Electronics shows a remote control prototype that works without using batteries.

Users generate a small amount of electricity through vibration when they push a button. NEC proves this can turn on or off a TV (or any CE appliance) and switch channels or control volume.

A powerful concept for a battery-less device...

Go NEC's No-Battery Remote