Nest looks to expand further in Europe as it announces the availability of the Nest Learning Thermostat, Nest Cam Indoor and Outdoor, and Nest Protect products in Austria, Germany, Italy and Spain.

“Nest is focused on creating a home that takes care of the people inside it and the world around it,” the company says. “This expansion brings us closer to achieving our goal of helping people around the world save energy, stay safe, and feel secure in their homes.”

Such products were first available in the UK since April 2014, and are currently already sold in Belgium, France, Ireland, the Netherlands and the UK. Since then the company has seen many a change, including the departure of CEO Tony Fadell, the introduction of the Nest Cam and the acquisition of smart home rival Revolv.

The company also has partnerships with European utility services, with the aim to create "compelling offers" for customers. Names include Baxi in Spain, Wind Tre and Engie in Italy, and Generali Group in Germany.

Nest products will be available in the aforementioned countries by mid-February 2017.
