Nest announces the ruggedised version of the Cam security camera, the Nest Cam Outdoor, will soon reach European markets together with a new Nest app feature dubbed Sightline.

"Sightline is a new app feature that shows you what Nest Cam has seen and lets you speed through days of recorded video in seconds," the company says. "It pulls out key moments automatically so you don't waste time digging through footage. Looking for the moment someone opened the gate two days ago? No problem."

Through Sightline users can quickly scrub through large amounts of footage, while automatically-generated "key moments" highlight important happenings within the recording. In addition, the feature allows for 3 hours of free video history for all users, even those without a Nest Aware subscription.

For Nest Aware subscribers, the company provides special alerts letting one know of suspicious activity in a more accurate manner. It also allows for "time travel" by putting an entire video history into a single, user-controlled, timelapse.

A final Nest announcement has the introduction of different colours for the Nest Learning Thermostat-- coming soon in white, black and copper as well as the traditional stainless steel. These will be available for a limited time, and are designed to "fit into every home."

The Nest Cam Outdoor should hit European markets by October 2016. The Nest app updates,
